More Troops Sent to Curb Fires, Sniping

By John M. Lee BELFAST, June 28 (NYT) The Unionist government of Northern Ireland, apparently seeing support from the new Conservative government in Britain, took an unyielding stand today after a harrowing night of sectarian riots, gun battles and widespread arson. The Protestant parades that touched off the violence are continuing. No government concessions are envisaged and Deputy Prime Minister Brian Faulkner raised the specter of subversive plots against this Protestant-dominated state.

Five men were shot dead and 40 seriously injured in savage riolence that continued until 8 o'clock this morning.

Tonight, British troops fired tear gas to dispel an advancing Roman Catholic mob in the Bogside slum of Londonderry. Gasoline bombs ignited shops and houses in the area. In Belfast, a grocery store in the Catholic Newtonwards Road was looted and set aflame. Armored into the area.

To Counter White House's Advantage

Democrats Demand Equal TV Time

By William Chapman

WASHINGTON, June 28 (WP). National Committee this year, he trade. Hsted at the top of his priorities what came to be known as "cracking the television nut."

He meant, simply, that Democrats had to gain access to the nation's television sets or risk a near-total eclipse while a Republican President radiated his messages at will from the White House.

From that assumption has flowed a series of extraordinary demands and legal petitions which could, if granted, substantially alter the balance of political powers between the ins and the outs of

The balance already has shifted a bit. There have been demands, partially met, for the right to buy television time to solicit funds so that more television time can be bought this fall.

The Columbia Broadcasting System has given the Democrats the first of four free half-hours this year to reply to President Nixon's speeches and press conferences, or to explain their points of view. But the big nut is yet to be racked: The Democrats' sweeping assertion that opponents of the President must be given free and

But in national politics, a sitting President's automatic access to network time has been the big boon of this telegenic age. Nixon has used the medium frequently and—his Democratic opponents concede skillfully. President Kennedy was acknowledged to be a master of television but he used it much less than the present incumbent has. A CBS analysis shows that Mr. Kennedy appeared on network television for a total of three hours and 49 minutes during his first 17 months in office. Former President Johnson was on for five hours and six minutes in the comparable period. And Mr. Nixon has used it for eight hours and eight

Out-of-power critics of both parties have complained, over the years, that a President's television advantage was unfair. The networks' customary response has been that opponents were interviewed for their rebuttals in the course of normal news gathering. The new Democratic demand for response time, however, insists that opponents of a President must be able to compete in both time and format, a novel concept. A twosentence comment on a half-hour presidential presentation is not enough, they argue.

The Democrats' petition to the Federal Communications Commission makes this broad claim: "To I.S. forces from Vietnam at the a President's unfettered televised presentations, those who hold differing views on controversial issues of public importance must be free to project a coherent and complete response, which will at least begin to approximate in the minds of the viewers the impact of the President's position."

The broadcasting industry is certain to oppose that claim. The

Al Capp May Run Against Kennedy, Would Tackle 'Fakery and Lunacy'

SAN DIEGO, June 28 (UPD).—Cartoonist Al Capp, creator of Lil Abner, says he is thinking seriously of challenging Sen. Edward M. Kennedy to represent Massachusetts in the U.S. Senate.

Mr. Capp said Friday he had been "in the White House twice in recent weeks" and had a phone call "from a man who really counts in the administration, urging me to run." However, he did not answer directly when asked whether President Nixon had asked him to run.

"I'm not really a conservative," Mr. Capp told the annual Republican fund-raising dinner here. "I am a humorist, whose first duty is to make as much money as he possibly can, and secondly to find fakery and lunacy, where he finds it, and expose it.

"I've watched fakery and lunacy shift from the far right to the far left, and a change from McCarthyism and the KKK to the SDS. If that makes me a conservative, call me one."

Mr. Capp, who recently changed his registration to Republican from Independent, said he found Republican policies "the most sane sober, the least slobberingly sentimental and the least

He also said he would eliminate political satire from his comic strip if he decides to run. He said he had been assured by Massachusetts Republicans they could match Sen. Kennedy "dollar for dollar in campaign financing." if he would run.

Chief Washington Correspondent of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch Copyright 1970 From behind guerrilla lines the great success that President Nixon has claimed in Cambodia has the doubtful look of immment fallure.

I feel some hesitancy about making broad judgments of this kind because, in the 40 days that I was a prisoner of guerrillas in Cambodia, I saw only a small slice of the new war that is raging there.

I had no opportunity to talk to high-level policymakers. Yet, it was a unique chance to see the war from the other side. As a result, in this final article describing my experiences I feel a responsibility to do what a reporter seldom does -express some personal opin-

What I saw and heard during nearly six weeks as a cap-tive in "liberated" Cambodia convinced me that President Ninon's policies inadvertently were helping to create conditions for a Communist-control-led "people's war," a savage, prolonged struggle by an elusive, determined guerrilla front with strong popular support.

The two-month-old invasion by the United States and South Vietnam has not succeeded despite the capture of enemy weapons and supplies. Instead, it has created hatred of the United States and strengthened the influence of both North Vietnam and the Viet Cong in Cambodia. I saw the early development of what appears to be a Cambodian people's movement—the Front Uni de la Nation Khmer, popularly known as FUNK, It is loyal not to the shaky government of Prime Minister Lon Nol, but to Norodom Sihanouk, who was ousted in a military coup March 18 and now heads ment in exile from Peking and Hanoi.

American action, when viewed from the enemy's side of the combat zone in Cambodia rather than from Washington or Saigon, appears to be the latest in a series of disastrous moves that have carried the U.S. deeper into the conflict in Indochina ever since I saw no reasonable prospect of a successful outcome or even of an end to the secable limit on their westward expansion. The Cambodian countryside, where most of the population lives, is being radi-calized and quickly turned into a massive, dedicated and eifective revolutionary base. Already friendly relations between the Cambodian people of the countryside and the Vietnamese revolutionists who have been living and operating here for a decade are being strengthened to form a solid revolutionary front with Sihanouk as its leader and Ho Chi Minh as something approaching a saint.

Above all, what was once popularly called the Vietnam war has been widened to the point where it involves all of former French Indochina, and no limit is in sight either in breadth or duration. Even if President Nixon keeps his pledge to remove American troops from Cambodia by this Tuesday, June 30, the forces of the U.S.-sponsored government of South Vietnam are expected to remain indefinitely on Cambodian soil in an effort to maintain the fragile Lon Nol regime. Meanwhile, the thunder of B-52 strikes and the rumble of smaller U.S. bombs and artillery foreshadow continued and increasing use of American firepower in Cambodia after the American troops leave. Asians will be fighting Asians while the U.S. reduces its own casualties by releasing the indiscriminate terror of bombs and shells from the relative safety of the sky and distant firebases.

It is the full flowering of the Nixon Doctrine for cheap victory in Asia. But that is not to say that it will work.

I have seen a massive movement of Cal Vietnamese trekking westward by night and sleeping in thatched huts by day, in the face of allied bombing raids and advancing tanks and infantry columns

Instead of a narrow band of safe havens along the eastern frontier for Viet Cong and North Vietnamese troops and their Cambodian allies, their zone of operations is spreading over much of rural Cambodia.

Sihanouk Strength

The geographic result of Mr. Nixon's strategy is one thing. More important is the political result, evident everywhere we travel in Cambodia's so-called liberated territory.

At each plantation or farmer's hut where Beth, Mike and I have been secluded for two or three days at a time, we have seen evidence of allegiance to Sihanouk and of its counterpoint-extreme hatred of the United States and President

American shells and bombs mean to Cambodians that the U. S. is waging an unprovoked, colonist war against them. They see America as a would-be successor to the French, trying to turn back the clock of history in the face of a swelling spirit of Asia for Asians.

The war has built empathy among the Cambodians and Laotians for Communist North Vietnam and the Viet Cong. Those are the notes I wrote one night in Cambodia, on May 22, just 15 days after our capture. I still feel as I did

The U.S. in-vasion boistered the Communist argument that the Americans, not the guerrillas, are the aggressors that turned a peaceful country into a battleground. As a result of the war, we saw poverty developing in a land of plenty. In what appear-

Communist Dominated Area

Communist Infiltrated Areas Original Communist Sanctuaries

This map shows the situation in Cambodia as the June 30 deadline for American withdrawal approaches. The Communists control most of the northeastern sector and infiltrate freely through much of the rest of the country. Cambodian troops are concentrated around the population centers. The South Vietnamese and remaining American troops are near the South Vietnamese border. Dark border areas indicate the Communist sanctuaries which the allied troops were sent in to destroy. From a peak of 31,000 after the invasion began on April 30, the number of American troops, who continued to withdraw last week, stood at about 8,000 at the weekend.

Makes Cambodia Report Tuesday

Nixon Adds Up Gains and Losses

By Robert B. Semple Jr.
SAN. CLEMENTE, Calif. (NYT).—On the eve of what promises to be Richard Nixon's most detailed and elaborate report on the United States military adventure into Cambodia, his senior associates are still claiming success. But they are not saying what they will do if drastic steps are required to rescue the beleaguered Government of Cambodian Premier Lon Nol and they are not sure -given the opposition of Con-gress-whether they will be able to do anything.

report on Tuesday-the day on which he originally promised to have withdrawn all Americans from Cambodia except for interdiction air strikes against Communist supply routes. The betting now is that he will depart from his customary habit of appearing on television and issue instead a white paper, but already the White House has begun to beat the drums.

Mr. Nixon himself gave a hint of the tone of the report last Thursday when he told : whooping audience of 12,000 Jaycees in St. Louis: "Because of the success of our efforts to destroy enemy sanctuary areas in Cambodia and their supplies. we can continue with the program of withdrawal and replacement so that by the spring of next year a total of 265,000 Americans who were there [when Mr. Nixon was sworn into officel will be back home bere in the United States of Amer-

Private Briefing

Meanwhile, Mr. Nixon, Henry Kissinger, his chief adviser on foreign affairs, and senior men from the State and Defense Departments offered a long, private briefing on the war to about 40 top executives from the major television networks and what was described as a "cross section" of newspapers from around the country.

In still another gesture the President will appear on TV this week for a discursive chat on a broad range of foreign policy problems with commentators from the three networks. This unusual exercise would seem to be good politics, apart from whatever extra embellishment Mr. Nixon is able to give the controversial Cambodian Nobody here denies that the Cambodian venture put the President and most narticularly his staff under great strain, and some of them, for psychological reasons alone will be happy to see it end. But one despairs ci getting any of them to say that the operation may have created new problems for the United States, the South Vietnamese, and the Cambodians themselves; on the contrary, they are uniformly bullish, asserting that in a military sense the operation has vielded the gains hoped for it while in a political sense the liabilities will begin to diminish as time goes on.

Buying Extra Time

"The country will relax a bit after we've pulled out," one aide said, when asked to address himself to the political part of the Cambodian equation. "The President will have strengthened his credibility in Hanol by responding vigorously as he did and with the Americans by getting out when he promised. He will have bought time on both fronts."

The purchase of extra time in which to strengthen the capabilities of the South Vietnamese and protect the gradual American withdrawal ranks at near the top of the list of military accomplishments claimed by the White House, although officials are vague on precisely how much time has been

But they insist—and Mr. Nixon is likely to claim in some detail—that the operation has not only led to the seizure of perhaps as much as two-thirds of the enemy's stock in the sanctuaries but has left the Communists in disarray and fighting on three fronts (including Laos), boosted the morale of the South Vietnamese, and even promoted the long-range interests of the Nixon Doctrine of Asian selfhelp by shocking the other allies in Indochina into a broader awareness of joint defense needs.

Stumbling Block

Politics Gain Upper Hand in Fight By Senate Doves to Curb Asian War

By John W. Finney

WASHINGTON (NYT).—The prolonged Senw ate debate on Cambodia will come to a probably confusing end this week. Inevitably the underlying constitutional issues were being obscured in the politicking between the White House and the Democratic-controlled Senate.

When the vote finally comes Tuesday afternoon, there is little doubt that the Cooper-Church amendment restricting future military operations in Cambodia will be adopted. In a constitutional context, that in itself will be a historic act. For the first time in history during the course of a war, Congress, exercising its power over the purse strings, will be seeking to impose restraints on the war-making powers of the commander-in-chief. Throughout the seven-week debate, the White House in an operation that has seldom surfaced, has sought to block or at least modify the Cooper-Church amendment on the very same ground that it would infringe on the President's powers as commander-in-chief. The original Republican tactic was to delay a vote on the amendment until American troops were with### drawn from Cambodia. Nixon Succeeds

With that tactic, which at times bordered on Republican filibustering, the White House suc-

As it became evident that the amendment was likely to pass, the White House changed its tactics. It sought to modify the amendment, perhaps to the point it no longer would be acceptable to its dovish supporters. Momentarily, the White House seemed to have succeeded with that tactic last week.

By a 79-5 vote, the Senate adopted a modification to the amendment, offered by Sen. Robert .F. Byrd, D., W.Va., recognizing that the President, as commander-in-chief, has constitutional powers to take steps to protect the lives of American troops "wherever deployed." That, although not in as precise terms as it had wanted, was a modification that the White House had been seeking, and some Republican opponents, such as Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas, promptly announced that they could now accept the Cooper-Church amendment.

With the Cooper-Church forces in discouraged disarray, a counter-move was conceived by Peter Lakeland, a legislative aide to Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R., N.Y. By a 73-0 vote, the Senate accepted a provision by Sen, Javits stating that nothing in the Cooper-Church amendment was designed to impugn the constitutional war powers of Congress.

As the debate dragged on, the administration came to realize that, with the Cooper-Church amendment, the Democrats were but setting the stage for a prolonged discussion of the Vietnam war. According to the schedule of the Senate Democratic leadership, the Cooper-Church amendment was to be followed by a measure repealing the 1965 Tonkin Gulf Resolution, to be followed by consideration of the McGovern-Hatfield "end-the-war amendment" that would cut off funds for combat activities in Vietnam by the end of 1970 and require the withdrawal of all American forces from Vietnam by mid-

In a case of petty legislative larceny. Sen. Dole took a resolution drafted by his Republican colleague Charles McC. Mathias of Maryland, who is not on friendly terms with the White House, and offered an immediate motion to repeal the Tonkin Resolution. The Democratic leadership lost the initiative. The Dole proposal was approved by an 81-10 vote, and pro-ac istration Republicans could take credit for repealing a resolution that was used by President Johnson to justify an expansion of the

But a more important objective of the administration was to abort the McGovern-Hatfield amendment that has become the rallying point for the doves. Sen. Gordon P. Allott, R., Colo., chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee, called up the McGovern-Hatfield amendment with the express intention of defeating it. So morthodox was the Allott move by Senate protocol that he may yet be turned down on his motion, leaving the McGovern-Hatfield forces free to call up their amendment at the time of their choosing and after they have mounted a $200,000 advertising campaign.

Either way, the Republicans believe they will win politically. Their calculation is that the electorate is becoming bored with the protracted Senate debate and that the doves will be in political trouble if they continue their carping while the President can point to success in Cam-the Cambodian operation will have turned sour by the time they start talking on the McGovern-Hatfield amendment and certainly by the November elections. But in an ironic twist, the Cooper-Church amendment could give the administration a political excuse. If Cambodia falls to the Communists, the administration could blame it on the restrictions imposed by the Senate, as it is already starting to do in suggesting that the Cooper-Church amendment would prevent implementation of the President's Guam doctrine of helping Asians to defend

Penn Central Collapse Jolts U.S.

By Frank C. Porter (In preparing this article, the writer had the reporting assistance of Bonald Ressler, Robbert J. Samuelson and William H. Jones—all of The Washington Post.)

NEW YORK (WP).—"They couldn't determine whether they were making money or losing it. They didn't seem to have a clear idea of how much commercial paper they had out. They had no controls on cash: they didn't know if it was coming or going." Thus a director of the Penn

Central Co. described what he called the "terribly poor and inept managemen." of the world's largest tramportation company before its bankruptcy last Sunday shocked financial markets around the world.

The same view came from a high Nixon administration ofprivy to the elaborate negotiations that preceded the government's abortive effort to ball out the railroad. The effort was abandoned when what he called the "political risks" foom-ed too great. The company's officers—even its president and newly appointed board chair-man, Paul A. Gorman—had no clear picture of the firm's finances when the discussions took place, the official said.

Implications of its failure go far beyond the far-flung boundaries of Penn Central's own empire. They call into question the health of the whole railroad industry, the wisdom of con-glomerate mergers, the liquidity American corporations in general in the face of tight money and declining business, and government transportation and economic policy.
What went wrong? How did it happen?

Series of Troubles

Ever since the merger of the New York Central and the Pennsylvania Railroad in February. 1968, the combined opera-tion had been plagued by expensive labor agreements, tight money conditions, spiraling debt. major breakdowns in service, a drop in freight shipments, increasing passenger deficits and -more recently—unusually bad winter weather and a general business slowdown.

But by many insiders' accounts. the key problem was a civil war within the company—and con-

"It was one of those incom-patible situations you find in business from time to time where you have so much friction a mess," said Robert S. Odell, a San Francisco businessman who was a Penn Central director until May 12.

If there is such a thing as glittering names in American railroading, they belonged to Stuart T. Saunders and Alfred E. Perlman. And the industry was stunned when they were fired as board chairman and vice-chairman respectively on June 8—the day before the government's plan of an immediate $200 million loan to be followed by legislated funds was presented to congressional leaders.

Mr. Saunders, the perfect picture of the Virginia aristocrat, headed the rich Norfolk and Western, then controlled by the Pennsylvania, before becoming board chairman of the Pennsy itself and then chief executive officer of the Penn Central. His influence extended well beyond railroads. He had close ties with the Kennedy and Johnson administrations (whom he served as a kind of unofficial ambassador to the business community), was an influential member of the prestigious Business Council, was the recipient of a long string of honorary degrees and joined clubs in 11 different cities.

Young Protégé

Mr. Perlman, more a "man of the people," was a protégé of the late Robert R. Young, the "populist of Wall Street" who installed Mr. Periman as head of the New York Central after gaining control in a bitter proxy fight in 1954. An MIT graduate and intellectual in an industry not known for its intellectuality, Mr. Perlman earlier had won a reputation as an operating genius by building the Denver and Rio Grande into a prosperous road after it had been in bankruptcy four times.

On paper this was the dream team for any American corporation-Mr. Saunders as the perfect front man with his impeccable legal, political and social credentials; Mr. Periman as the brilliant and innovative operating man

But it didn't work out that way. It was apparent from the beginning that Mr. Saunders and Mr. Perlman could never pull together in harness. Mr. Perlman had served as president and chief administrative officer of the merged company before being moved to vice-chairman when Mr. Gorman took over as president last December. Mr. Gorman also assumed the chairmanship when Mr. Saunders was fired earlier this month.

"Saunders has a lot of talent es a lawyer, but he just didn't. peake and Ohio know how to run a railroad," Mr. Odell, a former director, said. 'He took the position that the Pennsylvania had purchased the Central, rather than merging with it, and there was continual conflict between the men from each road. On top of that, they had two men for every job —with the Pennsylvania man usually on top." Other sources pointed out that many of the Central's most able executives

One incident is illustrative.

Costs Estimated

A year ago Mr. Periman's own estimates indicated that the $81 million that had been projected as the annual savings to be realized from merger economies would be wiped out by labor and capitalization costs of the merger. When he was reminded by a visitor that Mr. Saunders had just predicted even higher savings from the merger than originally estimated, Mr. Perl-man turned slowly in his chair and looked out a floor-length window of his oak-paneled office "I never comment on anything the chairman says," he finally muttered. A year later, Mr. Perlman put major blame for the bankruptcy on the growth of competitive means of shipping freighttrucks, oil pipelines, inland waterways, air transport-and the unexpected slowdown in the economy with increasingly tight money conditions.

But he conceded that there were "differences of philosophy of management" between himself and Mr. Saunders.

"The Pennsylvania wanted volume regardless of profitability," Mr. Perlman told The Washington Post in New York. We looked at profitability more closely. We wanted to put more money into the railroad, but they invested in real estate and developed it."

Mr. Periman was typical of most officers of the merged company in the use of "we" and they" to distinguish between Central and Pennsy personnel. "I was supposed to be in charge of operations," Mr. Periman says, "but I didn't have full control. There was too much fragmentation of author-

Whether the merger actually plunged Penn Central into bankruptcy can only be the subject of speculation. Many believe that circumstances would have been even worse without it, that the Central would have gone under anyhow. It had been in a precarious position off and on ever since World War II and faced bankruptcy when Mr. Young won control in 1954, although he was unaware of it. At any rate, Mr. Perlman was convinced that the Central couldn't make it alone in the face of the mergers of other Eastern roads, and he had grave doubts about a merger with the Pennsy. Joseph Borkin, another Young protégé and special counsel for the Central and the merged railroad until last year, wrote in his biography of Mr. Young that Mr. Young and Mr. Perlman made overtures to the Pennsy about merger in 1957. A different version comes from James M. Symes, former Pennsy chairman, who told The Washington Post that 'I proposed the merger; he [Young] hadn't thought about it, but he was very enthusiastic."

Mr. Periman changed his mind about the desirability of a Pennsy merger, particularly when the faltering Baltimore and Ohio came up for grabs a few years later. He waged an unrelenting proxy fight for the B. and O. but lost to the Chesa-

What Mr. Perlman wanted was an end-to-end, or complementary, merger as opposed to a parallel merger in which both parties serve primarily the same area and markets, in order to dispose of duplicate facilities. For years railroad theoreticians had envisaged a series of mer-gers that would create three competing systems in the East, each based on a major northeastern carrier oriented largely to miscellaneous freight and passengers—such as the Pennsy or Central—in combination with a mid-Atlantic bulk carrier serving the coal regions—such as Nor-folk and Western, the C. and O. and the B. and O. In general, the coal roads are big money

"When the C. and O. and the B. and O. merged, leaving out the Central, it was the Central's last gasp," said Charles T. Ireland, former president of Alleghany Corp., Mr. Young's holding company. Mr. Ireland is now senior vice-president of International Telephone and

It was then that Mr. Perlman sumed merger discussions with the Pennsy, knowing full well that it would be a marriage of Weaktiess.

"It's not a good merger," re is said to have told the late Sen. Estes Kefauver, D., Tenn., but it's the only one we can

As thairman of the Senate subcommittee on anti-trust and monopoly, Sen. Kefauver was considered the biggest impediment to merger. An associate recalls that Mr. Periman so charmed Sen. Kefauver that the senator withdrew his opposition. After about five years of hear-ings and litigation the merger was consummated in 1968.

If most of the investment community and the general public took the roseate predictions of the merging parties at their word—Rennsy stock had old as low as 12 in the early 1960s; stock in the combined operation hit a high of 86 1/3 in 1968-one person didn't.

That was Mr. Ireland. Mr. Young's vehicle for industrial conquest, Alleghany Corp., had been the Central's largest stockholder with 14 percent of the road's outstanding shares. As president, Mr. Ireland sold off 85 percent of these holdings in 1966, nearly two years before the merger was effected. should have been the tipoff that it wasn't going to be a viable a longtime Young associate observed

Economies Offset

The vaunted $81 million in merger economies were more than offset by what economists like to call diseconomies.

Mr. Ireiand and others, for example, pointed out that some trouble with reconciling the computer systems of the two roads was anticipated, but nothing on the scale of what developed.

As it turned out, computers of the two lines were incompatible for months. Whole freight cars and shipments were lost. Perishable goods frequently spoiled before they could be found. Shippers diverted business to other lines or trucking

Mr. Periman notes that the cost of altering locomotives so that they could be used on both cartiers was $750,000. An agreement with labor unions to assure that no jobs would be lost through merger—it permits a maximum cut in the work force of only 5 percent a year-was expensive, and no one had anticipated the current 8 or 9 percent annual wage increases that stem from inflation.

And then there were the big mistakes about the money S. Scott Nichols ir., raincage, analyst with W.E. Button and Co., noted that two years ago the Penn Central weighed the possibility of a bianket mortgage on its extensive real estate hold. ings. The company, for example, owns many of the larger buildings in the area bounded; by Madison and Lexington Avenues and 40th and 50th Streets in New York.

"But interest rates were climbing—they were up to 6 to 3 for 1/2 percent—and the company decided to wait until they went down." Mr. Nichols remembers. They kept going up, and the more they went up the more Penn Central felt they would go down. (The irony is that Penn Central was unable to sell a $100 million bond issue at 10 1.'2 percent last month). They were able to sell commercial paper until it became obvious that they were losing money and gimmicking consolidated earnings."

It was against this back-ground that Penn Central final-ly asked the U.S. government

The subject was first broached when Board Chairman Saunders met Secretary of the Treasury David M. Kennedy in Hot Springs, Va., the first part of May during the spring meeting of the Business Council.

The first real involvement occurred on May 26 when Mr. Saunders met in secret with a group of the Nixon administration's highest officials: Mr. Kennedy, Attorney General John N. Mitchell, Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans, Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird and Peter Flanigan, assistant to the Presi-

Mr. Saunders reportedly told the group that Penn Central faced the prospect of bankruptcy soon, possibly within the week The cabinet officers were understandably nervous. The stock market hit an eight-year low that day with the Dow Jones industrials dropping 10 points to S31. The connipresent fear was that the bankruptcy of a giant corporation could possibly turn the stock market plunge and moderate recession into panic and depression.

The Saunders Plan

Mr. Saunders came prepared with a plan and it won an immediate informal commitment from the government. Under a section of the defense production act designed to help little and medium-sized military sup-pliers, the government (in this case the Navy) would guarantee plemented later when Congress passed a bill permitting $750 million in federal loans to ailing corporations. A government source says the immediate congressional re-sponse was "generous" and included pledges to speed up passage of the railroad loan bill. After the legislators had time to think it over, however, they had second thoughts. Penn Central conceded that the $200 million alone wasn't enough to keep the company from going broke, and the trains would continue to run even with Penn

There were doubts in the executive branch also. Defense Under Secretary David M. Packard, though he worked hard to dissuade Rep. Patman from his opposition, feared that such a commitment might lead other companies, particularly giant and alling Lockheed Corp. 50 line up for government sid. But in the end the dominant factors appeared to be political, Stemming from what one con-gressional investigator called the "clubby atmosphere" existing between Penn Central and the Nixon adminstration.

October, but in effect, they were over. The French had had enough.

Gen. de Gaulle gave the reasons at his famous Jan. 14 press conference, at which he vetoed both British entry and French participation in a muitilateral NATO nuclear force armed with Polaris submarines. For Gen. de Gaulle, the two issues were inextricably related. For him Britain had quite simply become the U.S. Trojan horse. Prime Minister Harold Macmillan, in accepting President Kennedy's offer at Nassau of nuclear cooperation, had opted for the United States, not Europe. On the Common Market, it was the same. With Britain's attitude, said the general, the EEC would degenerate into a "colossal Atlantic community under American dependence and leadership which would soon completely swallow up the European Community."

Going on he said: "The question is to know if Great Britain can at present place itself, like the Continent, within a tariff that is truly common, give up all preference with regard to claim that its agriculture be privileged and, even more, consider as null and void the commitments it has made with EFTA "

Then, prophetically, he said he "would not be surprised if Britain one day is ready, but at present, it is not." A few years later, when Harold Wilson had replaced Macmillan as prime minister and Edward Heath had become Conservative leader, Gen. de Gaulle privately predicted that it would be the Conservatives and Mr. Heath who would lead Britain successfully into the EEC.

Envoy's Foresight

A footnote can now be added to that Jan. 14 press conference. An American ambassador, then on post in Europe when he heard about Mr. Kennedy's offer to Mr. Macmillan at Nassau, sent an urgent cable to Nassau urging that the deal not be made on the grounds it would end any hopes of a successful conclusion to the Common Market negotiations. President Kennedy showed Mr. Macmillan the cable and the latter's reply was that the two things weren't related, that the Common Market negotiations were economic and the Nassau deal was political.

Gen. de Gaulle had a different conception of things.

It is clear then, that though almost everybody else blames the French for the 1963 failure. the French blame the British. As a French diplomat puts it not without some bitterness, "The British wanted to make over the Common Market into their image." In this man's view, Gen. de Gaulle saved the 1958 when he blocked the British proposal to create a vast European free trade area, and again in 1963 when he kept the Common Market from degenerating into one.

But Gen de Gaulle is gone now, and who will save the Common Market this time? The answer might well be the

It is useless to argue over whether Britain is more European today than it was seven years ago. Those people who didn't agree with the French vetoes argue that Britain was no less European in 1963 than today, and Gen. de Gaulle, with his vetoes, actually retarded mon Market development by at least seven years. What can be said is that Britain, having been through the mili before understands better the grind. And that the obstacles to agreement in 1963 have been chipped away in the intervening years. The primary obstacles in 1963, personalities aside, were the Commonwealth, the semicompetitive European Free Trade Association, Britain's relationship with the United States and agriculture policy. The situation today is such that George Thomson, who was to be the Laborites' Common Market negotiator, could say this spring that the first three issues no longer loomed large, and the essence of the negotiations would be agriculture

The focus is still on the French. Their desire to get on with the talks was illustrated by Mr. Pomoidon's statements at The Hague last December and by subsequent positive state-ments by Foreign Minister Maurice Schumann. But there is still some doubt in Rome, Brussels, Luxembourg, Bonn and The Hague that France has completely renounced some earlier attitudes.

Following the breakdown of the '63 talks, the French were heard to say frequently that en-largment of the EEC could only lead to its destruction. This was in part a defense of their own veto, but also in part it gave expression to the French belief that enlargement would necessarily weaken it.

This was translated at The Hague into Mr. Pompidou's statement that France would accept enlargment only if it did not weaken the community. The ball was sent back to the British. We'll let you in, was the French position, but don't try to change what we have built. Don't try to change it into your image, as before.

The hope that has always been put in the British on the Continent is that in the autumn of the Commonwealth and of American hegemony over Europe, Britain would finally find its destiny in Europe. The hope was that the British would recognize their mistake in distaining the Common Market in its origins and would now make the necessary sacrifices to atone for that error.

It is recognized on the Continent that only the British can transform the EEC into something more than "little Eu-rope." Without the British there is no question of the other candidates, Norway, Denmark and Ireland, joining. Without the British, the EEC will remain largely as it is, a reasonably tight customs union. torn in loyaltises and direction, frustrated in expansion, with little hope of ever realizing its potential

But because Britain knows this, it expects something more than simply signing on the dot-ted line to gain entrance.

For the British, the problem essentially that of coupling with a foreign organism which was rebuffed 13 years ago but since has grown into something rather more desirable. Or, using a French image, British Ambassador to Paris Christopher Soames said last week that the was like a moving train that Britain was trying to get aboard.

The obvious question is: How much will the train have to slow down for the British to get on? The extreme French view is not at all—the British simply will have to run fast enough. For the French, there is only one thing to be negotiated and that is the transitional period. Nothing in the Treaty of Rome or the agreements made since the treaty is to be changed. The debate will be simply over how long it will take for the British to adapt. Much has been written about the time that was spent haggling seven years ago over importations of Australian kangaroo meat into the market. What is forgotten is that the kangaroo meat was only a symbol for British concern over its commitments to the Commonwealth. In the intervening years Britain's problems with the Commonwealth have been largely cleared up, thanks in part to the Commonwealth's recognition that Britain's future, sooner or later, was in Europe. As the new negotiations open, the Commonwealth problems can be largely boiled down to Carribean sugar and New Zealand butter.

EFTA Not an Issue

The French state flatly that no permanent exceptions can be made for anything, butter and sugar included. In the French view it is a matter of negotiating a transitional period these products - perhaps five or seven years—during which Commonwealth exporters will have time to find other markets. Neither the Six nor the candidates expect EFTA to become an issue in these negotiations. Two EFTA countries Norway and Denmark—are applying with Britain for entry into the KEC. There is general agree-ment that the others, Austria, Switzerland, Portugal, Sweden and Finland, are to be kept informed during the talks. There is also agreement that if the negotiations succeed, satisfactory arrangements will have to be made with those EFTA countries left out.

There is little talk anymore of Britain's "special relationship" with the United States. This was almost a personal issue with Gen. de Gaulle and he is gone. The United States still backs British entry into the EEC. And with the election of Edward Heath as British prime minister, there is renewed talk of Franco-British nuclear coop-

Which leaves agriculture. The problem here is immense and it alone would seem to give justification to those who say the negatiations will go on for probably two years before everything is worked out.

Put simply, it is a question of how much time the candidates are to have to bring their agriculture prices up to the level of the supported EEC price. Here, the candidates are divided. Denmark, for example, with a largely agricultural economy and generally high internal prices, asks for no transitional period at all. The Danes are ready to sign and bring their prices up to the EEC level the next day. But for Britain, a huge food importer with low internafood prices, it is a matter of raising food prices some 15 percent, and it is obvious that the British want as long a period as possible to do this. Not only will the British consumer be paying more, but Britain will have to pay an estimated $1.5 billion per year into the community fund (made up of agricultural levies, customs duties and 1 percent added value taxi, which will be a considerable drain on the British balance of payments. This significant increase in British farm production resulting from the higher food prices,

The EEC will argue that Britain can well afford this. for British industry, with duty free access to a market of 250 million instead of the home market of 60 million, will at least balance it out. Which is, after all, why British industry has always pushed hardest to get Britain into the market

A last element, and perhaps the most interesting, is the monetary and political future of the EEC once the new candida-

Political Pace

A true Gaullist would argue that the EEC will never again be as strong as it once was. There is doubt in these quarters over Britain's "European" conviction and even more doubt over that of Norway. But the British can justifiably turn this arement around-and they do-to say that Britain is ready to go as fast and as far along the road to supra-nationality as are the French. Which, as long as the Gaullist legacy exists, won't be very far at all.

The political development of the Common Market has disappointed almost everybody. For years there was nothing more than occasional consultations among the Six. and it was not till the meeting at The Hague that EEC political development received any real impetus.

This year, a permanent po-litical body has been established to recommend political procedure, and regular meetings of the Six foreign ministers have begun. The governments of the Six have given the community its own budget and own resources, a move which in France was hailed by one Gaullist deputy, Christian de la Malène, as the most important REC move since the Treaty of Rome, and condemned by another. Jacques Vendroux Gen. de Gaulle's brother-in-law, as a bit of unconstitutional supra-nationality.

There are similar divisions in other countries, but despite them, these moves have represented one timid step forward. The EEC is also on the road toward creation of a Euand an eventual common currency, and it is here that Britain—and sterling's role as a world wide reserve currencywill run into more problems during the negotiations.

For many, it is inconceivable that nations as diverse as Britain, France, Norway and Italy could ever identify their political motives. But for others, and there are many real "Europeans," the peace and potential of Europe can be secured only through aligning political goals, Britain may necessarily "dilute" the EEC, as some Gaullists will tell you on some days, but it may also concentrate it as some others whisper when inexplicably imbued with a rare wave of optimism.

In enlarging the European nucleus, however, the thoughts turn more and more to those countries left out. Not only countries like the United States, which see an ever-wider customs union spreading before them, but those European countries left on the fringe, the Swedes, the Swiss, the Austrians, the Portuguese.

The bets can still go either way on whether the talks that get under way tomorrow will succeed, but optimism reigns. As one European diplomat put it, everybody will be very careful this time that he is not at fault for making the talks fail. There is no de Gaulle to hide behind all ground troops from Cambodia, the situation of the government of that country is far from enviable. Already, much of Cambodia has been fought over, much given up to the Communists. And there is a marked reluctance on the part of Cambodia's neighbors to come to her help.

Of course there is a wrangle developing over the extent of the success which attended the American incursion. This is largely because the administration and its critics are looking at the expedition from differing points of view-each valid, given the premises.

To have been a certain success, the Americans and South Vietnamese should have wiped out substantial enemy forces in their sanctuaries. That would not only have greatly weakened the threat to South Vietnam's flank and even to its heart but would have greatly reduced Cambodia's own peril. The enemy, however, escaped as usual, leaving behind, it is true, a vast amount of stores, but taking enough with them. or having alternate sources for enough, to enable them to take control of substantial areas of Cambodia in exchange for those from which they were evicted.

The allied forces have palpably, if only temporarily, diminished the Communist ability to raid from Cambodia into South Vietnam, or to supply their forces resident in the latter country. That, in Mr. Nixon's terms, is a distinct plus. Moreover, it is probable that the capture of Phnom Penh, which was imminent when the Americans and South Vietnamese marched in was at least delayed. The delay may have given the Cambodian government, the South

On the eve of the American withdrawal of Vietnamese and the Thais sufficient time to prepare some kind of defense.

> For it should be clearly understood that it was not allied intervention in Cambodia that "widened the war." Cambodia was actively attacked by the Communists on the heels of the palace revolution that ousted Prince Sihanouk; it was that event which brought Cambodia into the zone of active operations. With or without Americans on Cambodian soil, there was going to be war there-partly civil, partly a North Vietnamese transposition of tacit, peaceful occupation into a forceful defense of bases and offensive action against the prince's successors.

Regardless of what precipitated the war, however, the Cambodians are in a difficult position. The American involvement prevented a showdown in the first weeks following the revolt in Phnom Penh; the limitations on that involvement prevent one now. The war may well be long and wasting for all concerned-even though the United States may be physically able to pull out of Cambodia, and reduce its commitments in Viet-

This potential grinding struggle adds another argument to the many that already exist for a diplomatic solution to the whole mess, In theory, both sides are asking for truly neutralized governments in Cambodia and in Laos; there is no overt reason for setting all of Southeast Asia aflame. And the very extent of the conflict should give North Vietnam practical reasons to start negotiating in earnest-in Paris, or Geneva, or anywhere else. There is obviously something to this charge, but the charge is not quite fair. For television may be as greedy as big business was in the twenties or the bi unions were in the thirties and forties, but it is not as free to do what it chooses. It dramatizes the frivolity, permissiveness, and violence of the age, and it is responsible for the noisy abomination of the singing commercial, but it is not responsible for the rules that enable rich political candidates to buy TV time and win elections over poor and often better candidates who can't afford to but time on the tube.

In so doing, it has recognized that the present system greatly favors the party in power and that some effort should be made to give the opposition at least a limited opportunity to reply.

> This can never be an "equal opportunity." The President speaks for the whole country. He alone has all the information essential to the security of the nation. In his inaugural address, his State of the Union messages, his economic reports, his TV press conferences, his special messages to the Con-gress, his proclamations on historic occasions, his international pronouncements, his trips around the world and his indirect statements twice a day through his White House spokesmen, etc.—through all this he dominates the news. But television adds greatly to his political power and the more TV influence increases, the more Presidents will use it to enhance their authority at the expense of the political opposition.

For example, President Eisenhower made 49 live TV network appearances in his eight years in the White House, but President Nixon has already made 22 live TV appearances in the last 16 months. He will make two more in the next few days, the trend is clear, and it started before the Nixon administration. Each President since Eisenhower has been making more TV appearances before the nation and increasingly they are being staged in prime evening time to larger and larger

Opportunities Great

The political possibilities of this are fairly obvious. Long before the development of national television in America, historians were observing that the "strong" Presidents were those who knew how to manage public opinion and the weak Presidents were those who failed to master the arts of public on's Cambodian venture has raised to a new pitch the contention by his opponents that his real aim in Southeast Asia is to "win" the war in Vietnam. Now that the ground involvement in Cambodia is coming to an end, the point is worth examination.

Mr. Nixon has never said on the public record that he wants to win." He has reduced the American goal to a single point: to allow the South Vietnamese "to determine their future without outside inter-

On June 20, in his much-discussed speech assailing the President's critics, Vice-President Agnew cut through the obfuscation. In criticizing Sen. J. William Fulbright, Agnew said the senator has apparently abandoned America's cause of a non-Communist juture for Southeast Asia."

Here, for the first time from a top administration official, is a clear-cut statement of what the government would like to see out of the war. Agnew spoke of "Southeast Axia" and not specifically of Vietnam, but the context of his speech leaves no doubt of the meaning.

The U.S. involvement in Vietnam from the time of the 1954 Geneva conference has been founded on keeping that country out of Communist control. That was the Eisenhower-Dulles motivation, John F. Kennedy's and Lyndon B. John-There never has been any doubt that Richard M. Nixon. whose involvement in the issue goes back at least to 1954, always reasoned the same way.

Just a Cover?

The question, however, has been whether Mr. Nixon, since assuming the presidency 17 months ago, has based his policy on that premise or whether his public statements have been only a cover for what it often called "an elegant bugout" from the war.

The probability is that Mr. Nixon. like so many other Americans, suffers from a dichotomy: He wants to extricate the United States from the war, but he does not want to "lose" it in the sense of having had more than 50,000 Americans die in vain. Thus he has tried to pull out troops in a manner that would produce a reasonable chance that non-Communist future for South he could leave behind a govern-

MOSCOW.—The best guess is that this coming decade will mark a strategic period during which Russia and China both prepare for a possible showdown but that there will be no outbreak of either war or peace between them. Each side wants to buy Informed opinion here seems to divide accordingly: a majority thinks of possible conflict with China some day- a minority thinks of probable conflict-on even smaller minority thinks of certain conflict. Nobody seems unalterably convinced that harmony will be restored.

Nevertheless, there appears slight chance of major confrontstion in the predictable future since such is rationally improbable. It is logical to reason that as Chinese nuclear power increases, Peking will grow more responsible—just as

Washington and Moscow did. Moreover, while Sino-Soviet relations are exceedingly bad, China's actions are more cautious than its vituperative words. Peking realize it is still far too weak to attack the USSR. Moscow, on the other hand, sees a cancer growing but estimates there is ample time to try other approaches before any need to operate.

It cannot afford to start a conventional war with the Chinese, thus creating for itself a super-Vietnam. Although it has large forces opposite China, there are no signs of preparation for sustained limited war-no vital new roads or

Only a Nuclear Conflict Any conflict would therefore have to be nuclear and tactical missiles are deployed in East Siberia and Moscow's Asian ally, the Mongolian people's republic. However, Moscow knows nuclear war would bring disastrous consequences even if won. It would irreparably tarnish the Soviet Union's image and might risk uncontrolled holocaust.

Soviet analysts appear persuaded that China cannot pose any real military threat for perhaps ten years. China's main forces are held back from the frontier to be used if necessary in a people's war from rear positions. For its part, Moscow has established a new command area—the Central Asian military district-along the border.

Preparations on both sides seem essentially defensive as each toys with other options. Thus Moscow has stimulated an anti-Chinese movement among the Turkmenian population of Sinking, once a Sino-Soviet condominium but now ruled by Peking. for defenses in the east as strong Communist party chief Leonid L Brezhnev has sponsored an Aslan collective security system, now stored in the Soviet icebox for emergency use. Still another option is Russia's initiative to explore explore warmer ties with Chiang Kai-shek's Taiwan regime.

In Southeast Asia Moscow is at a temporary disadvantage vis-qvis Peking. Its influence in Hanoi has declined but it hopes North Vietnam will realize it is overextended and acknowledge the traditional danger of a strong China. Soviet leaders fulminate against America but have recently done nothing but watch and wait as the new Indochina campaign develops.

Deal With Bonn

In Europe, Moscow really wants a deal with Bonn to free its hands in the east. Recent propagandahad claimed West Germany provided the technology for China's space shot but this line has ceased in order to help current talks.

Militarily, both Russia and China have been stockpiling for possible trouble. The U.S.S.R. has bought up high quality steel and rolled steel for vehicles, in West Germany, the United States and Japan. The need for defense priorities has been used as an excuse for decelerating economic progress.

Russia's own military-industrial complex stresses the Chinese danger as a reason for larger defense budgets. The threat of invasion from the west has lost credibility —as is evident from continued negotiations with Washington (SALT) and Bonn.

The International Herald Tvioune velcomes letters from readers. Short letters have a better chance of being published. All letters are subject to condensation for space reasons. Anonymous letters will not be considered for publication. Writers may request that their letters be signed only with initials, but preference will be given to those fully signed and bearing the writer's complete

But the Soviet marshals, deprived of the catchword of a western menace, stress the eastern menace. Marshal Ivan I. Yakubovsky warns that China is preparing for war. Marshal Andrel A. Grechko calls as those in the west. Logically speaking, real conflict between the two giants seems in the end unlikely. Russia, the stronger power, doesn't want it and China shouldn't. The big question is whether logic will prevail in this crucial matter.

While both sides seem ready to use the coming decade for preparation only, the issue may be decided if one employs that time more effectively than the other and then feels overconfident. What if Peking achieves a weapons breakthrough? or Moscow makes a deal with Bonn? Or if either feels convinced it has reached a fundamental accord with Washington? Any sudden shift in the balance of forces that can now be extrapolated might wholly change the picture. Meanwhile, the name of

Market Suffering Rigor Mortis; Weighing Four Seasons Failure

By Condon Bakstansky

PARIS, June 28.—Evidence continued piling up last week that the Eurobond market is suffering from rigor mortis: Prices continued under pressure on the secondary market, a newiss'e plan was postponed before it surfaced, and erstwhile Eurobond houses dug into other lines

Hanging over the market this week is the bankruptcy of Four Seasons Nursing Homes, an-nounced Friday night, What will happen to its $15 million, 15year 7 1/4 percent coupon Eurobond issue with warrants is unclear, as the firm's affairs are now in the hands of the court. Often, such debt is paid off at a fraction of its face value.

But for the market as a whole, the psychological damage is more important than the losses suffered by Four Season bond holders. First educated guesses were that lower quality, lesserknown issues in the secondary market would be hit hard and that the stress on liquidity, already strong, would become paramount

The main problem was that the Four Seasons failure came hard on the heels of the U.S. rathroad crisis and some fears that this represented just the ip of a major liquidity crunch

Market members had already seen re-examining issuers' balance sheets in the wake of the Penn Central bankruptcy. And numors about cash problems at Chrysler—rumors Chrysler promptly and firmly deniedneve not helped market conidence. If those two cases roduced a sobering effect, Four Seasons might be expected to result in a hangover.

Things have not really been well in the market for some time. White, Weld's first-half 1970 tabulation of total issues floated shows a 24 percent drop, to the equivalent of $1.09 billion, from the 1969 six-month total. And without the two giant floating rate issues, the total

Also indicative of money-raising problems is that it took 55 issues to raise this year's lower total, compared with the 46 issues floated in the year-ago

Taking the brunt of the downturn in cash-raising possibilities, not surprisingly, were equity-linked and deutsche-mark denominated issues. Total convertible and straigh-debt-with-warrants flotations dropped to $117.5 million in the 1970 first half, from $642 million in the year-earlier period. DM-denominated issues fell to the equivalent of $76.5 million from $541.3 million.

Some hope that the DM mar-ket might be rejuvenated by uncertainty in currency markets has been quashed for the moment. The postponed issue last wetk was a DM100 million one from Cie. Française des Petroles.

Market sources cited both the queasy post-Penn Central atmosphere and the expectation that the Bundesbank would soon be tightening up conditions in the West German money market as reasons for the CFP decision to postpone.

N.Y. Market Shows Sharp Losses for Week But Is Calm After Penn Central Bankruptcy

By Thomas E. Mullaney NEW YORK, June 28 (NYT). -The financial markets were somewhat shaken but far from shattered by the bankruptcy debacle of the Penn Central's transportation arm this week. Although not wholly unex-pected, the giant carrier's action June 21—seeking, and obtaining, the protection of the courts while it reorganizes its financial affairs—jolted the business

The Penn Central's own securities dropped sharply, of course, and investors became more selective, especially in purchasing lower-rated bonds. But, overall, the stock market showed only a moderate decline for the week and the bond market actually improved, with interest rates all along the spectrum moving generally low-

The Federal Reserve did not step in immediately with massive infusious of credit to bail out financial institutions in the current liquidity squeeze, but it did let the markets know, by word and action, that, as the lender of last resort, it stood ready to provide additional cred-it, if needed, to protect major financial institutions from insolvency.

Most significant was the Fed's decision last Tuesday to eliminate interest-rate ceilings on large commercial bank certificates of deposit maturing in one to three months, indicating the central bank's eagerness to keep banks that any unusual financial strains resulting from the Penn Central's troubles could be eased through extra borrowing at the discount window.

The financial community was pleased by the Fed's swift re-sponse and was also convinced that, at the moment anyway, any fears of a liquidity crisis, with large numbers of corporations unable to borrow money at any cost, seemed grossly exaggerated. Liquidity crises? No. Liquidity squeeze? Yes.

NEW YORK, June 28 (NYT) .- Prices of stocks on the American Stock Exchange and in the over-the-counter markets dropped sharply last week.

The plunge took the Amex index to 20.23 Friday, down 0.78 from the level on Friday a week ago. Volume during the week moved higher, to 15,008,175 shares, compared with 12,989,710 The three most active issues on the Amex indicated a variety of interest. Solitron Devices was the pacemaker and closed at 15 3/4, down 3 3/4. Equity Funding, which had been busy the week before, sank to 19 5/8, down 2 7/8. Asamera Oil closed at 11 1/8, down 2 1/4. One stock eyed with interest—and some puzzlement—was

Yates Industries, which closed at 27 1/2, down 12 points from the week before. A spokesman for the company, formerly called Circuit Foll, said: "There's nothing around here to account for it. There's a general slowdown in the electronics industry but we're still running at full capacity."

The National Quotation Bureau index pointed the way to the downturn in the over-the-counter market. It closed yesterday at 306.38, compared with 316.75 just a week ago. Raychem dropped 7 points; Seven-Up was down 5 1/4, Success Motivation lost 3 1/2, Tampax was down 9 and Energy Conversi the financial and business realm this week, there were three other developments of highly significant importance.

One was the collapse of the crucial, final-stage talks between the United States and Japan seeking voluntary restrictions on exports of textiles to this country. The failure to reach an agreement induced the Nixon administration reluctantly to support enactment of legisly to support enactment of legis-lation imposing mandatory quotas on sharply rising textile imports from Japan and other exporting countries. Free-trade advocates were highly disap-pointed by that turn of events. The two other major developments during the past week were the disclosure that auto sales had taken a big jump— 16.7 percent—in mid-June, the first increase from year-earlier totals in seven months, and the government's report that wholesale prices in June are giving another encouraging periormance. The overall wholesale price index, important because it is the precursor of consumer price trends, continued at a moderate 2.4 percent annual rate of increase during June. while the industrial wholesale price component rose by only .l percent the smallest amount in a year. The movement of the price indexes may be a signal that the inflationary spiral may be peaking out at last, while the improvement in the auto business may be a sign that the downturn in general business conditions may be There have been reports that isation that the Penn Central's bankruptcy move did not bear catastrophic implications for the markets and for the nation's economy. .

The stock market, however, posted sharp losses in a broad retreat last week. In general, the losses offset the big gains that had been achieved the week before.

The tally of declines and advances was heavily weighted on the down side, with 1,415 issues in minus territory for the week, 221 on the plus side and 95 unchanged. New lows for the year were touched by 340 stocks and new highs by only ten.

With a drop of $2.59 points, the beliwether Dow Jones industrial stock average fell below the 700 mark again and ended at 687.84.

The New York Times combined average plunged 1959 to 285,30, Standard & Poor's 500stock index dropped 3.58 to 73.47, and the New York Stock Exchange composite fell 2.04 to

Although there was a pronounced downward movement in the market, trading did not increase substantially—a somewhat heartening development for Wall Street's optimists. The week's turnover aggregated 49.4 million shares, against 47.9 million the previous week. Penn Central, with the bankruptcy action of its railroad subsidiary dominating the in-vestment scene, led trading volume last week on the New ### York Stock Exchange. It drop-ped 3 5/8 points to 7 1/2, after opening the week at a new low of 6 1/2, on turnover of 1,785,500 shares. The stock sold at a peak

price of 86 1/2 in mid-1968. Telex. No. 2 on the active list, dropped 3 1/2 to 12 1/2. The computer sector generally was hit with losses as, further down the list, Memorex dropped 19 points and Burroughs fell 17 5/8 points. Chrysler declined 2 to 18 1/8.

It was beset by rumors of Hquidity problems emphatically denied by the company as fears of poor corporate liquidity were set into motion by the Pennsy bankruptcy.

Automakers also felt the impact of selling by some mutual funds. General Motors, No. 4 in the volume race, sagged International Telephone, Telegraph, the fifth-most-active ie, dropped 2 5/8 to 35 1/2. This represented some profit taking from the previous week, when the company announced its acquisition of Hartford Pire Insurance was effective.

Bernard Cornfeld, the flamboyant American who started the company in 1956, was replaced in May as chief executive officer. There have been unconfirmed reports that he will attempt to regain control at the meeting here.

Sir Eric Wyndham White moved from vice-president and a member of the board to replace Mr. Cornfeld as president and board chairman amid reports the company was hardpressed for working capital. The appropriement of Sir Eric's appointment said it was temporary. Subsequent reports have speculated that he would become permanent executive of-

The company, with assets that reached a peak of about $23 billion last year, released its annual report earlier this year showing a decline in earnings 1969. Footnotes to the auditor's report said more information was needed concerning certain loans by the company.

2 Supertankers For Greek Owner

ATHENS, June 28 (AP).— Two supertankers of 283,000 tons each, being built at the Odense Lindo shipyard in Den-mark for shipping magnate George S. Livanos, will raise the Greek flag when delivered in January and April, 1972. They will be the largest vessels ever to fly the Greek flag. The honor is currently held by the 227,506-ton supertanker King Alexander the Great. handed over two weeks ago by the Japanese Ishikawajima Harima Heavy Industries to Markos and Petros Nomikos.

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

STOCKHOLM, June 28.—Six young Dallas experts, Jim Jaco-by, Bob Wolff, Mike Eisenberg, Bob Goldman, Mike Lawrence and Bob Hamman, received their world bridge championship trophies here Priday from Princess Christina of Sweden. Receiving the Bermuda Bowl-the first Americans to do so since 1954—were team captain Os-wald Jacoby, and deputy capwan Jacoby, and deputy cap-tain Ira Corn ir. And all of them wondered what would have happened if the Italian Blue Team had been here to defend the trophy it won on ten successive occasions, from 1957 through 1969.

The Dallas Aces lost one match out of 12 in the qualifying series. They had a shock when Nationalist China won the first of the four final matches 13-17, but they then overwhelmed their opponents 18-2 and 20 to minus 2 reducing the last match to exhibition status. Tomorrow the Aces will attempt to win the world pair championship, a title the United States has never won. The diagramed deal, played early in the third session of the final, gave the Aces a giant profit and sounded the death-knell for Chinese hopes of the world title. When the hand was first played. Harry Lin and Eimer Hsiao held the North-South eards for China. They bid as shown to six spades, apparently a safe contract.

But Hamman led the diamond three, which succeeded brilliantly because South, not wanting to give East the chance to take the diamond king and return a club for his partner to ruff, put up the diamond ace from dummy, banking on a three-two trump division. And he then went down in the slam. losing tricks to the spade jack and the diamond king. The aces were plus 100. When the hand was replayed, Jacoby and Wolff, for the Aces, bid and made seven clubs. The United States gained 2,240 or 19 international match points on the deal.

EUROPEAN NOTEBOOK 1

In the first article in a series of two. Marc Sloning recient the literary scene in France and Germany. In tomorrow's origin he will discuss Italian novels.

By Marc Slonim

FRANCE

LAST year Louis Aragon, member of the Central Committee of the French Communist party, wrote a preface to "The Joke," a novel by Czechoslovakian Milan Kundera, that made him persona non grata in the U.S.S.R. Now Jean-Paul Sartre's introduction to "Trois Générations" edited by Antonin Liehm (Gallimard) has exploded like a political bomb among the French pro-Communist left.

"Three Generations" reproduces a dozen interviews Liehm obtained from outstanding Czechoslovak writers between 1966 and 1968. They render vividly the intellectual atmosphere in which the "Spring of Prague" had developed until it was brutally killed by what Sartre calls "a plunge into the long night." It is well known that in 1968 Sartre had condemned the invasion of Czechoslovakia. But his in-troduction marks the first time in the meandering course of his various social commitments that he has launched so open and violent an attack against the Kremlin and the orable and continuous degradation of Soviet socialism."

In his 30-page essay he produces a devastating expose of the Moscow regime or, as he calls it, "The Thing." It has, he writes, "mobilized menthings, heads of beasts becoming heads of brick, all pos-sessed by the lust of power; these monsters established a hierarchy of bureaucrats, each commanding in the name of his superior, and the man at the top in the name of The Thing itself. The latter, by its very nature, is unable to change or progress: it does not need to renew its cadres; when one bureaucrat disappears he is replaced by another who resembles the first like a brother, and is not a bit younger."

For Sartre the power system in the U.S.S.R. is a kind of gerontocracy, the reign of old. conservative, sclerotic functionaries who look at people as objects and remain blind and deaf to real human beings. Sartre asks questions that have never been answered by what he calls "concentration-ist socialism," as opposed to "socialism with a human face." Among other things he ridicules the "official lie" launched by Khrushchev in his explanation of Stalinism as "the cult of personality." "So Stalin was a bad man, we agree," writes Sartre. "But how was he hoisted to the throne and then supported by the Soviet society for a quarter of a century? . . . Why were the high ideals of revolution transformed into their opo es: Inve of ba ty into cruelty. love of truth into a system of denunciation? "The rebirth of socialism in Czechoslovakia." he continues. "has been strangled by a counter-revolution, and this did not come from Western imperialism but from the U.S.S.R. which re-established The Thing by force and violence . . . Now. after August, 1968, we must abandon the consolation of moralism and reforming to lusions: we can not repair the machine; the people must seize it and dump it into the garbens can." Though Sartre is not saying anything totally original (the ideas he formulates today hav been expressed by many think ers before him), coming from so celebrated a left-wing will er, they acquire an undenish significance and are bound provoke a vast echo.

GERMANY

In Germany the press had devoted long articles to the latest publishing feat: the first edition of the eagerly awaite novel "Zettels Traum" (Bo tom's Dream) by Arno Schmid (Stabiberg Verlag, Karlsruhe This huge folio (1,330 page 10 million printed characters costs 345 marks varound $95 and would make a 5,396-pag paperback. Is any public caps ble of appreciating this giar to which the readers of Stah berg Verlag had to dedicat more than 600 working hours Nevertheless, excerpts from the elephantine monster at fascinating.

In the course of the last tw decades Arno Schmidt he published some 20 books an many translations and emerge as a keen avant-garde novelis bent on verbal experiments an the creation of a new proform. Using all sorts of device including odd typographical se tings, Schmidt has attempte to express not only man's ur conscious and its effect on lar guage, but also such "other d mensions," as he terms then as humor, parody and an ety mological play on sounds an the hidden significance o words. He writes "apropos" i: his own manner: Poe." This is not just a joke Poe occupies a place of hone in "Bottom's Dream," and one of its central themes.

The novel revolves around married couple and their teer age daughter who visit the old friend Daniel Pagensteche in the country to ask his at vice on various problems cor nected with a translation of Poe (Schmidt has himse published an excellent versio of Poe's works.) As in "Ulysses. the narrative takes place with in a 24-hour period andescriptions are interrupted b comments, discussions, quots tions and long asides, a larg part in English.

The multilingual texture ( Schmidt's work recalls Nabi kov. Some German critics hav compared it to Joyce's "Finne gans Wake." Schmidt replie that he did not learn abou "Finnegans Wake" until he wa-40 and had aiready formed h own literary style. At any rathe is more inclined to believ that Sterne's "Tristram Shar" Smollett's "Humphre Clinker" and Lewis Carroll' "Sylvie and Bruno" influence him before he ever read Joyce

Lombardi Has Tumor Removed From Abdomen

WASHINGTON, June 28 (WP).-Redskins coach Vince Lombardi, 57, appeared "excellent" resterday after a 2 1/2 hour operation in which a tumor and a two-foot section of his colon were removed, his surgeon reported, Preliminary examination showed the tumor was nonmalignant, reported Dr. Robert J. Coffey, a professor of surgery at Georgetown University.

Final word on whether the growth was cancerous, however. must wait for further studies in the Georgetown hospital lab. which will take four to five days, Dr. Coffey Edward Bennett Williams, president of the Redskins, said that on the basis of information he received Lombardi will resume normal activities within about four weeks. The Redskin training camp opens on July 15.

of crime in the streets." "Wrong!" cried Holmes. "For two years I had heard and read of these invariably inno-cent victims. It was clear to me that if I could establish in fact that only the innocent were victimized by street criminals. there would be an obvious way to eliminate crime in the streets."

"Do you mean—?" Yes! By keeping all inno-cent persons off the street, criminals would either have to go into the house after their prey or abandon their criminal Ways.

Before he could urge this solution on government, Holmes had to test the theory. It took only two days of investigation to explode it. The first three innocent rictims he investigated proved to be innocent enough, if one overlooked a little intergenerational malice and a rather nasty case of reckless driving.

The fourth case involved a man who had been robbed of $17 while walking near his home. Holmes's investigation showed that at the time of the robbery, in fact, this victim was en route from shooting a cousin six times without wit-

"I had nearly decided that aggression never occurred with its clothes on." he related, "when I heard of a remarkable incident on an Ivy League campus and flew up there to check the facts."

It seems that a student, having just left the bath and toweled himself, had put on a pair socks when, glancing out the window, he saw a complete stranger bearing certain symbols which indicated that he disagreed with the freshly bathed student on an issue of lively interest on that particular campus.

Enraged and wearing only his socks, the provoked student charged into the street and struck the offending stranger on the jaw. Holmes, who had tracked down both principals, was proud of having recovered the felled man's reply to this blow. "Why," the man had exclaimed, "that was an act of not quite naked aggression!" ### Slight Edge

The hand-made peace pendant that the voung wore on leather thongs before the Oct., 1967, Pentagon peace march has been slicked up in gold costume jewelry, in belts, rings, earrings. It is sold at the most "establishment" department stores, although some clerks don't know what Californian Alvin Duskin-the first to come out with the peace symbol in clothes is perhaps the greatest paradox among those making money on anti-war senti-ments. Mr. Duskin, 37, is a former analytical philosophy student who admires Karl Marx and Fidel Castro. He files peace flags (resembling the U.S. flag) over his five-story factory, which irritates some San Franciscans. His business last year grossed $3.3 million and he expects to double the take in 1970.

His knit garments with the interwoven peace symbol came out in 1967.

In Mr. Duskin's San Francisco headquariers, there's a slight edge to the tele-phone voice of Lew Harris, 36, when the subject of money and peace comes up. "If anybody thinks they can make some money, they're going to," said Mr. Harris, who handles public relations, among other

"Hundreds and hundreds of people see only money in the peace symbol. But maybe that's not so bad. Every time that symbol goes out, it does something to somebody's head." Until recently the line between peace symbol and red, white and blue wearers was fairly clear. Obviously, those against the war chose the stark, cross-hatched circle. Those on the side of administration war policies displayed flags.

Thus someone in the red, white and blue camp was typified by a Washington real estate saleswoman. She puts on a flag pin every time there's an anti-war really: "Just to show them where I stand. I really get mad if one of those awind, long-haired things screams at me because I'm wearing the flag. Can you imagine? In my own country, as if it were un-American or something."

Dead in the East

The Naked Grape's Goldberg and copartner Louis Diskin, 50, are saying the peace symbol may be picking up some in the South and Midwest, but it's almost dead on the East and West Coasts.

"Things that happen on either coast filter across the country about a year later," said Mr. Diskin.

He and partner Goldberg see flaginspired shirts and pants as the next big seller in the war and peace area. The avant-garde company, adviser to at least one giant (and formerly conservative) college sweatshirt manufacturer, made the flag-pattern shirt worn by Abbie Hoffman at a House Un-American Activities Committee hearing Oct. 3, 1968. After conviction in the court of general sessions for "defiling the American flag," Mr. Hoffman cried, "I regret that I have only one shirt to give for my country."

"It was a special order shirt," said Mr. Goldberg. "He knows our pattern maker." "Now, that's where it's at. In shirts like Roffman's. The kids on the street, in Greenwich Village, are doing our designing. I think it's patriotic; that's what I told the police when they checked us out. If I thought it was a put-on, I couldn't do it. I wouldn't take a flag and cut Mr. Goldberg concedes that the flaginspired clothes whose wearers are some-

Norwegian grocer of modestimeans, a comely girl who worked for a time as a domestic at the Pocantico Hills, N. Y., estate of Nelson A. Rockefeller. He was the son of Nelson A. Rockefeller, a recent graduate of Princeton with a promising future as an investment banker. In 1959, Steren C. Rockefeller, then 23, visited Norway, where the 21-year-old blonde had re-turned. Shortly afterward, young Rockefeller was married to his father's maid, Anne Marie (Mia) Rasmussen, in the climax to what one local news-paper called "one of Hans Christian Andersen's fairy tales come true." Last weekend, in Juarez, Mexico, Mia divorced Steven on uncontested grounds of "incompatibility of temperament." Conditions of the settlement were described as 'generous," Mrs. Rockefelier retaining custody of the couple's three children, who will live with their mother at the family home in Pocantico Hills.

She was the daughter of a

McSorley's old ale house. whose 116-year-old practice of turning away women with a variety of hoots, clangs, and whistles, was held on Thursday to be illegal, will be able keep on barring women. least until tomorrow. Feder Judge Walter R. Mansfield explained that he had not issued 2 formal order to integrate drinking, and that the two women who had brought suit must appear in court to apply for an order requiring the New York bar to admit females. Lawyers of McSorley's, meanwhile, indicated that they, too, would appear in court to argue for a stay of such an order, pointing out, among other telling factors, that the institution has no ladies room nor any plans to install one.

GRUMBLING: Passengers on a Wuppertal, West Germany, streetcar, partly over traffic jams which held up their ride for 15 minutes, but mortly over the fact that their 44 year-old driver, unidentified by the UPI dispatch, abandoned them to their fate. Twe had it up to here," the driver told his 100-odd clients. "That's the end. Everybody out." With that, he turned the tram around and set off in the opposite direction, on schedule. The head of the Wuppertal Transit Authority apolegized to the riders for the inconvenience. As for the driver, We've given him some cigars and a few days to smoke them."

The other day Linda Dunson, 20, who should have known better, refused to give up her seat on a San Francisco bus to a little old lady, about 65. Whereupon the latter proceeded to call the former names, hit Linda over the head with a cane, stopped to catch her second wind and hit Linda over
